APPENDIX I ISTP 2014 — List of participants
APPENDIX II ISTP 2014 Program

1. Introduction

The fourth International Summit on the Teaching Profession (ISTP) took place in Wellington, New Zealand, on March 28 and 29, 2014.

The summit opened with a formal Maori welcome ceremony, the powhiri, to greet visitors. Opening remarks were provided by the Honourable Hekia Parata, New Zealand's Minister of Education, and by the hosts of the three previous summits — Arne Duncan, US Secretary of Education (first and second ISTP, New York City, 2011 and 2012); and Jet Bussemaker, Dutch Minister of Education, Culture and Science (third ISTP, Amsterdam, 2013).

The summit, organized jointly by the New Zealand Ministry of Education, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and Education International, brought together more than 300 teaching professionals and policy-makers, including 26 ministers (see APPENDIX I for list of participants), around the theme of “Excellence, Equity and Inclusiveness — High-Quality Teaching for All.” (See APPENDIX II for the program).

Remarks were given by Andreas Schleicher, Deputy Director for Education and Skills and Special Advisor on Education Policy to OECD's Secretary-General; Barbara Ischinger, OECD Director for Education and Skills; Fred van Leeuwen, General Secretary of Education International; and Minister Parata.

2. Canadian delegation

The Honourable Jeff Johnson, Minister of Education for Alberta and Chair of the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada (CMEC), led the Canadian delegation, and the Honourable J. Alan McIsaac, Minister of Education and Early Childhood Development for Prince Edward Island, was deputy head of delegation. The delegation also included the following members:

- Andrew Parkin, Director General, CMEC Secretariat;
- Thomas Bradley, Chief of Staff to the Minister of Education, Alberta;
- Imelda Arsenault, Senior Director of Learning and Early Childhood Development, Department of Early Childhood Education and Development, Prince Edward Island;
- Antonella Manca-Mangoff, Coordinator, International, CMEC Secretariat;
- Dianne Woloschuk, President, Canadian Teachers' Federation (CTF);
- Calvin Fraser, Secretary General, CTF; and
- Mark Ramsankar, Vice-President, CTF.

Representatives from the Centrale des syndicats du Québec (CSQ) were unable to attend the summit this year.

3. Main issues discussed that are relevant to CMEC

In keeping with ISTP 2014's theme, participating countries had the opportunity to discuss promising practices, challenges, opportunities, and lessons learned around three questions:

- How can high-quality teachers and leaders be attracted to and retained in the schools in greatest need?
- What are the system levers for achieving equity in increasingly devolved systems?
- How can we create the learning environments that address the needs of all children and young people?

Here are some of the key points raised by delegates:

How can high-quality teachers and leaders be attracted to and retained in the schools in greatest need?

- While expectations and pressures put on public spending are increasing and governments and schools are being asked to deliver more with less, one important factor in attracting qualified teachers is higher wages. We know, however, that this alone is not sufficient. Teachers also need to be valued. When teachers' contributions and need for professional development and training are not considered, they tend to leave the profession.
- Minister Johnson (Canada) signalled that the difficulty in attracting qualified teachers to remote areas lies in the fact that resources cannot be allocated at the same level when the number of students is lower. He stressed the necessity of integrating and collaborating with the community at large, which can provide the resources needed to support students and teachers. He also emphasized that education systems must concentrate their efforts on children, not on rules.
- Dianne Woloschuk (Canada) remarked that there are synergies that come from collaboration among teachers and that it is important to create a positive, creative, and nurturing culture. Teachers need to be supported and enabled to work collaboratively to build relevance for students. She also noted that there needs to be flexibility in adapting resources from the community that can be used to ensure schools in need receive appropriate support.
- Delegates highlighted the importance of ongoing professional development that is integrated into, and not separate from, the classroom and everyday teaching practices.
- They stressed, too, that teacher-preparation programs must be relevant. Programs that are not aligned with change will not equip teachers with the knowledge and tools they require to teach in this new environment.
- They also observed that a well-articulated system is one that is relevant for students and one that evolves. It is important to value the progress made and not just the final result.

- They emphasized the importance of finding a process that provides assessment, good data, and accountability without drowning educators in bureaucracy and unsustainable workloads that keep them from teaching effectively.
- Also underscored was the need to focus on the accountability of the system and not on accountability systems. Who is accountable for ensuring that students' conditions are appropriate? Who is accountable for funding? Positive results cannot be achieved if conditions for teaching and learning are dysfunctional and if the appropriate level of funding is not provided..
- Lastly, delegates raised the need to give teachers autonomy and flexibility, as well as clear rules, support, and collaboration across the whole system to avoid widening equity gaps.

What are the system levers for achieving equity in increasingly devolved systems?

- Delegates underscored the importance of supporting the potential in each student and the ongoing learning and improvement of every teacher. They also noted the importance for clarity and accountability and for avoiding socioeconomic segregation in schools.
- They discussed the critical role of leadership at every level of the education system as well as that of parental engagement, and of the need to take into account community expectations.
- Minister Johnson emphasized the need to work with the community, gain its support for the profession, share information among professionals, and work with unions on standardized testing and quality measures.
- He also stressed how important it is for governments to ensure that systems are well funded and that teachers are involved in policy development and implementation. He spoke of promoting a culture of collaboration and trust that supports teachers. It is necessary to rely on the ability of school leaders to identify and address equity issues within their own schools and to provide the appropriate programs to help them make the changes required. Systems should be designed to ensure coherence, alignment, accountability, support, professional autonomy, and conditions that foster trust.
- Delegates indicated that quality teaching should also be part of early-years education, before entry into primary school. The earlier we provide quality teaching, the better the results. The approach should be holistic, comprehensive, and take into account the diverse talents of the child.

How can we create the learning environments that address the needs of all children and young people?

- A good environment, which is inextricably linked to quality teaching, must be student-centric. Every school must strive to develop each child to his/her full potential. It is important to develop character and instill the concept of citizenship while ensuring strong numeracy and literacy skills at the same time.

- While the discussion focused on teachers and governments working together, Minister Johnson also emphasized the need to bring members of the wider community into the discussion — including parents and families, other government departments, and businesses — to help ensure that education is inclusive, responsive to the increasing diversity in our schools, and reflective of the needs of our economies.
- Minister McIsaac stressed the importance of proper training for day care. Prince Edward Island has instituted play-based programs, professional days away from the classroom, and opportunities for collaboration between teachers. He underscored the importance of having parental commitment and the need for leadership. He noted that development opportunities are provided in other sectors and that this approach should also be applied to the teaching profession. Finally, he underlined the importance of starting students in school as early as possible.
- The United States stressed collaboration as a fundamental skill for achieving a flourishing environment.
- Finland drew attention to the importance of physical space, which can either bolster or hinder inclusiveness.

4. Main outcomes of the meeting

Following these discussions, delegates from each participating country were asked to identify their priorities for enhancing equity and excellence. Minister Johnson, Minister McIsaac, and delegates from the Canadian Teachers' Federation agreed on the following three objectives:

- Strengthening early childhood learning and development, which includes recognizing the value of qualified educators as leaders in the early years;
- Promoting a collaborative culture that supports the teaching profession and distributed leadership;
- Mobilizing broader resources to support learners and teachers by integrating services, exploring partnerships, and engaging families and the community.

Countries will be asked to provide a progress report on each of their goals at the 2015 summit.

The meeting concluded with the announcement that Canada (through CMEC) will host the 2015 summit in Banff, Alberta. It was also decided that Germany will host the summit in 2016, and there were expressions of interest from Hong Kong for 2017 and Scotland for 2018.

5. Follow-up for CMEC

Some of the themes discussed in New Zealand, including those concerning leadership and early childhood education and development, will likely be featured on the agenda of the summit hosted in Canada will next year.

At their meeting in July 2014, ministers will discuss some of the highlights and lessons learned, and explore some of the options for structuring the 2015 summit in Banff.

The 2015 summit will be jointly organized by CMEC, OECD, and Education International, the world's largest global federation of unions representing teachers and education employees. The Learning Partnership will also be a major partner and co-host in Canada.

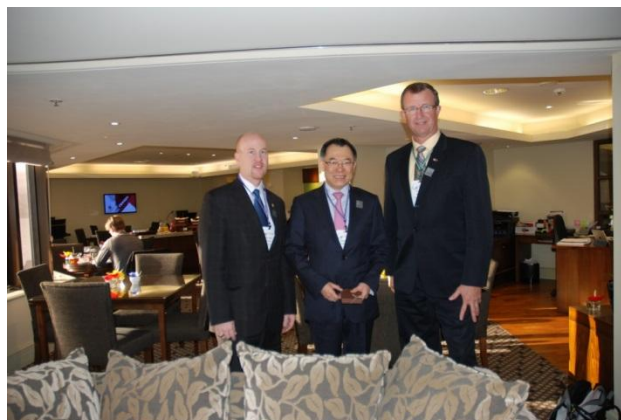

6. Summit activities

During the summit, members were invited to visit the Festival of Education, a fair that celebrates the educational achievements of New Zealand's students, schools, institutions, and learning centres by providing a platform for them to showcase their own successes and innovations. For more information, see the following link:

<http://www.festivalofeducation.org.nz/>.

7. Bilateral meetings

Both Minister Johnson and Minister McIsaac had the opportunity to meet with fellow ministers from several countries, including the United States, Scotland, Germany, the Netherlands, and New Zealand. They also met with counterparts from Japan to discuss the upcoming OECD meeting in Tokyo on the theme of "How to Best Shape Teacher Policies? Policy lessons from international comparisons and guidance for education and schools in the future." Organized by OECD and Japan's Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology, the meeting is part of the Teaching and Learning International Survey (TALIS) project and will take place in June 2014.
